Comrie: Deil's Cauldron The Deil's Cauldron is fully a mile from the village and reached by a richly wooded glen. The Cauldron is a large deep pool, basin shaped, into which, through a deep gorge cut in the solid rock, the waters of the Lednock rush with terrific force. The cliffs, forming an irregular circle, rise about 150 feet on all sides, and in the autumn, when the trees are turning gold and crimson, the scene realises one's prettiest notions of Scotland.

Don't you get disappointed if I do not send a letter for a morning or so. As I am out for this next three nights as you know, but will write as soon as I can. Love. J.
